Xinhua comments Dalai Lama influence is receding in Tibet

July 5, 2019

The authoritative Chinese official newsagency Xinhua (July 5) published a Commentary by its editor Mingmei highlighting why the 14th Dalai Lama's influence inside Tibet is ebbing and the number of his followers is declining. The report reiterated China's claim that the Dalai Lama is responsible for instigating violence and secessionist activities and self-immolations in Tibet. The Commentary cited three reasons for the fading of the Dalai Lama's influence inside Tibet. The first is that people who fled to seek his hospice and blessings chose to return to Tibet. Second, that following development and improvement in the livelihood of people they are prefer to pursue a path of stability and prosperity, rather than one of the bondage and ignorance under the rule of theocracy. It reiterated that the Tibetan people's rights to political and public affairs are protected by law; they enjoy freedom of religious belief; and enjoy huge economic success and cultural fulfilment. Third, the people's happiness depends upon the Chinese Communist Party and not the Dalai Lama. "The fundamental guarantee of development, stability and progress in Tibet is provided by the leadership of the Communist Party of China. Simply putting the Dalai Lama on the pedestal has never brought and will never bring happiness to the local people”. It cited as example the case of a 76 years old man named Tashi from Lhoka who used to swear by the Dalai Lama, but he has now stopped using that expression.

The commentary claimed that a poll was conducted among village officials in 2019 to ascertain the influence of the 14th Dalai Lama in the villages, but of the 1,500 village-level officials, 80% replied that the influence is minimal or has been on the wane.

The delegation comprised the DPP Secretary-General Luo Wen Jia, spokesperson Lii Wen and Director of Public Relations Hsieh Yu-Li.
