Official Chinese media coverage totally omitted the questions raised by some of the members of parliament and Tibet support group. Garnett Genius, a member of parliament from Alberta asked 'if he is representing Tibet, why is he speaking Mandarin instead of Tibetan' and if there is freedom of movement and foreigners are welcome, then why are even Canadian government officials wanting to investigate the Canadian Assistance project in Tibet denied visas time and again. To this, Pema Wangdue responded that 'Tibet, unlike China, has very high altitude and those who appreciate China are always welcome but we don't welcome anybody who supports the idea of separatism'. Another M.P. Arif Virani, who is also the Chair of Parliamentary Friends of Tibet, asked about the resumption of negotiations with the Dalai Lama and the prospects of the Middle Way Policy. Arif also asked about Tashi Wangchuk who was persecuted for advocating language rights in Tibet and the Panchen Lama. According to Pema Wangdue, 'Pachen lama has got a normal education and is soon finishing his graduation as well. Gedun Choekyi Nyima is an ordinary Chinese citizen. He is living a normal happy life, and he and his family wish to live without interference from outside'. Xi Jinping Talks About Minority Language Policy

May 2, 2018

In the National Work Conference, Xi Jinping said that language is the only way to communicate with each other and that without communication there is no way to understand each other. Without understanding each other, it is not possible to identify one. Therefore, Xi Jinping emphasized that it is essential that minority areas follow a bilingual education policy and they should learn Mandarin and the Han people in the minority areas should learn the language of that minority area. The minority nationals must know the Chinese language so that they will have a better job opportunity. It will help them integrate modern scientific knowledge in their society, and it will be an essential criterion to get included in society. Also, to become officials of the nation or regional minority areas, one should speak Chinese fluently. Those Chinese officials serving in the minority area should know their language to be able to work better.

Regarding the minority culture, he said the minority national's culture is not the culture of a particular area or minority region; it is the wealth of China's culture. But the culture of a minority is small in scope and weak to resist the fast-changing market economy. Many of the intangible cultural heritages are disappearing; it is not good to realize once it's gone. Chinese culture is a culmination of the culture of all the ethnic minorities and it is wrong to not preserve minority culture thinking. That is not Chinese culture. Minority people should recognize Chinese culture as their culture, and it is wrong to not follow the culture of China. This is a major problem, and it must be resolved.

China detains 30 Tibetans and disappears village leader for opposing mining at sacred mountain

May 14, 2018

Chinese authorities have detained scores of Tibetans and a village leader disappeared after they opposed plans to mine Sebtra Zagyen, a sacred mountain with an 800 year-old history that overlooks several villages located in Shakchu (Ch: Shaqu) Town in Diru (Ch: Biru) County, Nagchu (Ch: Naqu) Prefecture, Tibet Autonomous Region (TAR).

Information received by the Tibetan Centre for Human Rights and Democracy (TCHRD) has confirmed the arbitrary detention of 30 Tibetans around April 2, this year from the villages of Markor, Wathang and Gochu. All were beaten and detained after news about the detention of Karma, leader of Markor Village, and the mining project were leaked to exile Tibetan sources.

Karma was detained in late February this year for challenging an official order that forced all residents of Markor, Wathang and Gochu to sign a document that allowed local authorities to conduct mining activities at Sebtra Zagyen. The villagers were told that not signing the document would be considered as a 'separatist' act that they would be punished accordingly. Karma had openly confronted government officials telling them that he would sign the document provided they produced evidence of approval to the mining project from veteran party leaders such as Tenzin and Ragdi. When news of Karma's detention became available to exiled Tibetan sources, local authorities immediately called a meeting during which Tibetans suspected for their involvement in leaking the information were detained.

Tibetan Border City Entices Industry to Go West

May 5, 2018

The government of Shigatse, bordering Nepal, is using multi-million yuan subsidies to attract businesses and industries according to reports. Subsidies up to 20 million yuan ($3.14 million) will be granted to industrial or business projects that can work within the Shigatse Economic Development Zone, such as high-technology industry and modern logistics services. Those designated by the region's Government or TAR People's Government as key projects could receive as much as 30 million yuan. The report further stated that the Enterprises will receive rewards for seeking financing through stock market initial public offerings, with the sum ranging from 1.5 million yuan to 7 million yuan. The decision to provide subsidies was disclosed late last month at a news conference held by the Shigatse People's Government held in Shanghai, which has been paired with Shigatse since 1994 in a nationwide assistance program to boost development in Tibet. More than 400 top workers from Shanghai including government officials and professionals in different areas have been sent to Tibet in eight batches till date. Shanghai will be a major adviser for the upcoming zone, which is to be sited 5 km south of the urban area of Shigatse. The city was set up in 2014, and borders Nepal, Bhutan and India. According to the layout unveiled at the news conference, the 36.3 sq km zone comprises two major functional zones divided by the Jiaqu River, which flows across Shigatse and will hold as many as 120,000 residents. East of the river is the new city area, where the regional government will be seated, along with schools, sports facilities, business and residential areas. West of the river is designated as the industrial area, equipped with logistics services and other support facilities. The industries to be incorporated in the zone include logistics services, organic farming, drinking water industry, handicrafts, financial services and trade exhibitions, according to the Shigatse government. By the end of next year, the zone's output value is expected to hit 350 million yuan, accounting for up to 10 percent of that of Shigatse. Sang Baichuan, an economics professor at the University of International Business and Economics in Beijing, said the Shigatse zone signals that industrial transfers are shifting further to the west, which benefits the whole country. He said "East China, like Shanghai, excels in talents and capital, and there's a growing trend for the East to seek cooperation with the West in the industrial transfer." Sang Baichuan noted that the focus of the national Tibet assistance program is gradually shifting to "forming blood" rather than "getting blood transfusions", which is evidenced by the economic development zone. "Compared with lending money to the underdeveloped region in the very beginning, Shanghai now cultivates clusters of industries in Shigatse, which helps boost local economic development in a sustainable way," the professor said.

The road that joins Tibet and Nepal was almost completely destroyed after the Nepal earthquake. Kyirong is only about 24 km away from the Nepal border. According to Liu Jian, member of the Standing Committee of the Kyirong County Party Committee and Deputy Director of the Border Trading Port Party Working Committee, the Dromo Port unilaterally stopped border trading after the Nepal earthquake. Hence, the Kyirong Port became the only major channel for land trade between “China” and Nepal. In the first quarter of 2018, the total import and export trade volume was more than 600 million yuan. “Usually, we put more than 80 trucks in Nepal and released more than 70 vehicles. In the peak season, more than 100 trucks can enter and exit. The imported goods are mainly bronze sculptures, decorative copper ornaments, decorative aluminum ornaments, and handicrafts products etc., and exports of goods to clothing, footwear, agricultural and sideline products, textiles, hardware, small appliances, etc....

He also said that at present, the Kyirong port has been upgraded to become an international port. In the peak season, various types of coaches that enter “China” from the port every day can reach more than 30 vehicles, and the total amount of goods imported and exported in a year can reach more than 200,000 tons. Currently, there are more than 1,000 people engaged in border trade. China Railway’s 20th Bureau Group Tibet First Engineering Co Ltd. is responsible for the post-disaster reconstruction of the length, which is about 94 km long, of the national highway No. 216. In May 2016 the post-disaster reconstruction project was started and it is due to be completed. Personnel of the project department of China Railway 20th Group Tibet First Engineering Co., Ltd. are already preparing to leave. After completing the defect rectification and repair of the later stages, they will transfer this new road to the local traffic management department.

Indian Graduated Geshes are expelled from the Monasteries in Lihang

Lihang is considered as relatively freer in religious freedom compared to other parts of Tibet. Lihang is known to have broadcast Dalai Lama's speech in public places or during public associations and in monasteries and individual houses also they are allowed to keep portraits of the Dalai Lama. However, according to the latest news, the local authorities have not only banished Geshes and Lamas who have come from India from the monasteries and but also banned public teachings by them. People have been given instructions that they can no longer have the portrait of Dalai Lama and faith in him.

In Lihang, monasteries have this tradition of teaching the masses during the holiday on Tibetan language and literature, readings and writing, but now that has also come under the ban.

Apart from new strict rules, the local authority seized large areas of fields from the villagers in the name of tree plantations and arrested those who have participated in the Lihang annual horse race. Local sources are unsure whether the order has come from Beijing, or the local authorities are acting on their own to get the favour of the party.

59 Natural Protection Rights of Mineral Deposit Removed

May 4, 2018

The government directed to discard at least 59 'rights' to protect the Natural Protection of mineral deposits. These 'rights' are usually secured through public funds from either the province, region or district authority of that particular area. However, the government removed the rights of all the mining industries in Qinghai. Under the rights that were removed, the provincial government certified the district authority certified fifty-six and three. It covers mining areas like doe la rewo (མདོ་ལའི་བའི་), Tsang sum chu goe (གཙང་བསུ་ཅུ་གོེ་), tsa dham forest area (ཚ་དམ་གཤིས་ལྗོངས་ལྗོངས་ཆེན་མོ་) etc.

According to the government, the sudden removal of mining industry rights and right to protect the natural mineral deposit area is lawful. The government will produce standard procedures and regulations, as Qinghai is extremely important for overall environment of China. They reasoned that Qinghai is a source of important rivers like Machu (yellow river), Dri Chu (Yangtze River) and za Chu (Mekong) and it has a large impact on Qinghai's environment. The concerned regions have been advised to cooperate until the government comes up with a common standardized rule.
